

Can Magnet Therapy Relieve Gout Pain?

The debilitating pain of gout can be very difficult to deal with on a daily basis. When experiencing a flareup, most people will do almost anything to achieve some relief. There are a number of non-medical as well as medical therapies available to help manage the particular symptoms of pain, but is it true that magnets have the electricity to lessen pain?

- Magnet therapy or bioenergy therapy operates on the principle of the magnet's ability to correct bodily energy.
- According to this theory, when your body is healthy it produces electromagnetic impulses.
- However, when a person is in pain, those impulses experience an interference.
- Those who believe in the benefits of magnet treatment suggest that the magnets can proper these abnormalities in the body.
- Increased blood flow and o2 flow is also a documented benefit.
- When the body is balanced, the pain is reduced.

Magnetic therapy can be applied in various forms including magnetic straps or wraps, jewelry, and magnetic implants in pillows and mattress parts. There are different strengths of magnets on the market. The more powerful magnets can be quite a tad expensive. The use of these magnetic aids may reduce the pain, inflammation, and swelling that is brought on by a gout attack, headaches, general body aches from arthritis, and fibromyalgia.

Although most of the reports of success are anecdotal in nature, none of these claims have been studied nor does the US Food and Drug Administration support the claims. The American Cancer Society's position on magnetic therapy is the same. At this point, it is inappropriate for companies that produce these pain assists to make claims that many can cure diseases. However, there is a growing number of people who have made use of these simple pain aids and claim to have experienced a reduction in their discomfort.
