

Using Acupuncture to Help Pets with Pain

We've recently written about Reiki for dogs and hydrotherapy for dogs as excellent alternative treatments with regard to dog joint pain. Now comes a story about a New York veterinarian offering acupuncture for dogs. Mrs. Bousquet said acupuncture helped relieve her own sciatic soreness and now she's using it in her veterinarian exercise to help animals with dog joint pain.

- Michelle Bousquet tells a story in the Press Republican of a customer who's dog couldn't jump in and out of the car.
- Because the dog is older the dog owner had been very hesitant to administer pain treatment because of fear it would damage the dog's liver.
- Traditional chinese medicine sessions have significantly improved the dog's overall freedom.

Other Dog Owners Mirror this Story Upon Inquiring about Flexpet

There are so many owners who are extremely wary about giving prescribed pain medications because of liver damage as well as other unwanted side effects. What's more, surgical procedures can be extremely costly for owners, even with dog insurance that can often be confusing about certain insurance coverage and benefits. FlexPet with CM8 creates back the lost cartilage to be able to help increase overall dog joint mobility so dogs can run around, jump into and out of cars and get plenty of exercise. This process helps drastically reduce dog joint pain.

Acupuncture Today is a Medical News Service

In a recent article, Acupuncturist Gordon Cohen shared his experience with pet acupuncture, detailing the success he had with several patients. He noted the results "remarkable" and explained the immediate results. "Upon my removing the needles, the dog which has already been lying partially on his side jumped to his feet and scampered about, rushing to the owner's toes excitedly. The dog needed no more encouragement and ran to the steps right after my surprised friend who had reported that stair climbing had become difficult for the dog. Later, she reported which while on their afternoon walk the dog has been able to be able to lift his leg."

But relieving the pressure points through acupuncture for dogs is just one part of the equation. "Part of the reason why so many people see great results with FlexPet is because it's important to also build back the lost or harmed cartilage between the joints," said Janice Grabowski of Evansville, Ind.
